Support Your Immune System in Simple Ways

Catching a cold or getting the flu can happen any time of year, but the height of cold and flu season requires extra precaution. Flu activity often increases in the fall and peaks between December and January, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

Staying completely healthy throughout cold and flu season can't be guaranteed, but, along with following guidance from your health care provider, dietary and lifestyle changes can help optimize your immune system and well-being.

Eat Healthfully

Eating a healthy diet is essential for optimizing your immune system. Many experts recommend consuming whole foods and plant foods like fruits, vegetables, nuts, seeds and legumes as well as whole grains. These foods contain beneficial plant compounds linked to health benefits in humans. Consider one prime example, fresh grapes, and how they may support immune health.

* At the most basic level, healthy cells are the foundation of good health. Natural grape compounds, including antioxidants and other polyphenols, help protect the health and function of the body's cells.

* Studies suggest some grape compounds - resveratrol and certain flavonoids - may positively influence immune function.

* Additional studies show adding heart-healthy grapes to your daily diet can help support brain, colon and skin health. Maintaining healthy bodily systems is essential to defending against illnesses.

* Grapes are a good source of vitamin K, which may help support lung health.

An easy way to incorporate healthy foods into your diet is with simple recipes like this Immune-Boosting Green Grape Smoothie that contains additional nutritious ingredients that support immune health like spinach, walnuts and Greek yogurt.

Stay Hydrated

Drinking plenty of water is important for staying hydrated, which helps your immune system by keeping the body's defenses functioning properly. In addition to water, you can increase hydration by eating foods with high water content like Grapes from California, which contain about 82% water.

Exercise Regularly

Getting your blood pumping with a little exercise can help improve immune response and reduce inflammation, according to a scientific review from the "Journal of Sport and Health Science." Look toward aerobic activities like moderate-intensity walking, jogging and biking to increase the heart rate and encourage circulation of immune cells.

DOG OF THE WEEK

Meet Joey! Hello, it was reported that I am a good boy! I always go potty outside and I love to play! My friends here think that I would do well with a dog my size, but a meet and greet is a must. I am in the "teenage" stage of life, so I would love an owner who will keep me on the track of success. I'm ready to learn and be your best boy! I do not do well with small children or small animals.

Please contact Kootenai Humane Society at 208-772-4019 or visit our website at www.CompanionsAnimalCenter.org

"The Outdoor Insider"

The warmer weather we are experiencing throughout the region has made it easier for most folks to get back outdoors. Ice fishermen are disappointed, though. There are only a couple of lakes, that are at high elevation, that still have safe ice. I am sure it will be cold again, and the ice will form. Until then, I hope to get out to some of my favorite spots and take advantage of the warmth and even some sunshine.

My plan for last Thursday was to run down to Rocky Ford Creek to fish for big trout with my fly rod. The weather was going to be warm enough that my line wouldn't freeze to my guides, and I hadn't done any fishing for way too long. Then disaster struck. My wife went into our garage, which is actually a storage area, and found water on the floor. I went out and started mopping up, and we soon figured out that we had a major problem. The radiant heating system had frozen, broke the pipe and cracked the concrete surface. No amount of mopping was going to keep up with the water coming up through the floor. So, we spent much of the night moving things that could be damaged, which are still stacked in our living room. Plumbers came to our rescue and did the needed repairs, and I was able to go fishing on Friday.

When I arrived, I was the only rig in the upper parking lot, but two other anglers arrived shortly after. Usually, the best part of my day on Rocky Ford Creek is landing the first big rainbow. Last Friday was different. The two anglers I met in the parking lot was the best part of my day. First to arrive was Kelly Rupp, from Snohomish. He was a real fan of fishing Rocky Ford, and he was waiting for his friend Ron Romig, from Kettle Falls. These two meet to fish the Ford regularly, but it had been two years since the pair had been able to make the trip. When Ron rolled into the parking lot, it was a quite a scene as the two friends greeted each other. I could tell that they shared a lot of history and some great times together. Ron walked over and said that he was a long-time follower of my reports and E-Letters, and we had communicated several times over the years, and he was glad that we would finally meet face to face. Before I left I caught up with the pair and got to learn more about the kinds of fishing the two of them love to do. One of the places that they raved about was Twin Lakes on the Colville Indian Reservation. I haven't fished this lake for years. I may even join them for a day there next spring. This week's photo is of the two anglers I met at the Ford last Thursday.

These two anglers like to fish the very top end of Rocky Ford and cast dry flies to the big trout that are milling around above the bridge. I like to fish well below here. I find places to cast at the edge of the reeds. This makes casting very difficult, and I have to track my fly down in the reeds when I hesitate too long and let my back cast fall. I think I have better luck in these areas, though, as I don't think many anglers will put up with the hassle.

Well, my theory didn't pan out so much. I didn't get a bite and didn't see a fish rise all day where I was fishing. This was very unusual. Typically, I at least see some fish when I step up to the bank. Nobody was home on this particular day. Since I need to find something to blame on my poor success, I will blame the full moon this time.

If you keep your eyes peeled you can see some interesting things in the winter. I sometimes take a detour on the way to the post office in Leavenworth and spot a small flock of turkeys on the road to the ski hill. I saw them earlier this week in the same place, and later in the week in a completely different location. This particular flock has been around for years, and I have seen them numerous times. There seems to be about a dozen in this group. A couple of days later, as I was approaching my driveway I saw another flock of turkeys. There were about 20 of them. I have never seen this bunch before. They hung around in our side yard, and as I walked along the house to get closer look at them I found tracks clear around the house into the front yard. Also, we have a doe and two yearling mule deer that are in our yard year-round. They are quite used to us, and one even licked a chunk of ice in my hand last summer. I am now seeing other deer bedded down in the orchards as the snow has become very deep here in Leavenworth.

The spike in ice fishing activity at Fish Lake and the Columbia Basin was short-lived. The severely cold weather was followed closely by warm weather and thinned the ice to the point where it just isn't safe. I am getting reports that the same is true at the lakes that are at lower elevations in Okanogan County. I visited Fish Lake on January 20th, and there was enough safe ice to provide good fishing for over sixty people that I saw there at that time. However, on the following Monday I talked to someone that had actually fallen through the ice on Fish Lake. The ice is shrinking back from the shore and there is slush and water on the surface of most of the lakes now. Both Curlew Lake and Bonaparte Lake in the northern part of the state had very thick layers of ice on them and it would take a lot of warm weather to thin the ice to unsafe conditions, and I will be monitoring these as best I can.

I am really looking forward to a planned trip to Rufus Woods Reservoir. My friends have invited me along to try for big triploids and walleye at the upper end. Wish us luck!

ERIC WOLFE - QLISPE RACEWAY 2023 PRO ELIMINATOR CHAMPION

Eric Wolfe can trace his drag racing roots back to not far after what was then Spokane Raceway Park — now Qlispe Raceway — opened in 1974.

But it was not until 2023 that he won his first track championship with the title in Pro Eliminator. Wolfe parlayed a couple on event wins into securing a 292 to 240 edge over T.J. Loper.

Racing two classes, Pro and Sportsman, Wolfe said. "In sportsmen this year, I just couldn't do squat," he lamented.

However, "In Pro it fell the right way, I won," Wolfe said. "I think I was in three finals in a row and won two of them, so it was pretty decent."

Wolfe, who actually lives in Fife, Washington near Tacoma and commutes to race in QRP's Summit Series, first began racing at age 16 in 1980 while a student at University High School in Spokane Valley.

"I remember that was back and when we had (classes like) Run Tuff and stuff," Wolfe said. "So yeah, there's just good times." Wolfe raced then with and against classmate and best friend Bruce Nickerson, and still does.

Like many, Wolfe raced until family obligations got in the way in 1987 and took a hiatus until 1999. He competed for about a dozen years, hanging it up once again in 2011 only to come back again a decade later.

While no relation, Eric Wolfe used to race against a very stout competitor, Henrietta Wolfe, at Spokane Raceway in the 1980s.

"Henrietta kicked my ass at one of the AHRA World Finals, I think it was (19)87?," Eric said. "That's why I retired," he suggested.

Wolfe not just raced at Spokane but also Walla Walla's eighth-mile track. The convenient part for him is his car was stored at his mother's house in Spokane which cut down the expensive towing just a bit.

And talk about a dedicated racer, Wolfe

would leave work on Friday, drive to Spokane, pick up his car and drive to Walla Walla, drive back to Spokane, unload and head to the west side for work on Monday.

It was during that time Wolfe recalled one of his memorable outings in the 2009 NHRA Division 6 ET Finals Race of Champions at Woodburn Dragstrip in Oregon. It was an all-Spokane final round where Dave Oien prevailed.

But Wolfe got the better of Oien in 2023 who finished fourth in the Pro standings.

"I came back because of racing friends just giving me grief," Wolfe explained.

It's been a good couple of years for Wolfe who claimed 2021 Walla Walla Sportsman championship. There he raced against another QRP 2023 champion, Brian Jennen who claimed this year's Qlispe Sportsman title with Wolfe landing seventh in those standings.

That road trip to Washington wine country was quite demanding for Wolfe so he was excited when the Kalispel Tribe purchased the track from Spokane County in 2021.

"It was killing me," Wolfe said. "When the 'Q' (Qlispe Raceway) opened up, I was really happy. It was just bonus to do good in Pro (Eliminator) this year on the hill," he added referencing the nickname for the Airway Heights racing complex.

Wolfe turned 60 this past December and works for Dow Jones. He has grown kids who both like hot rods and his youngest races every-once-in-a-while.

QUESTIONS TO ASK
when considering selling

These questions will help you decide whether you're ready for a home that's smaller, larger, or in a more desirable location. If you answer yes to 2 or more of the questions, you may be ready to move.

Have you Built Substantial Equity in your Current Home?

Check your annual mortgage statement or call your lender to find out how much you've paid down. Usually you don't build up much equity in the first few years of your mortgage, as monthly payments are mostly interest. But if you've owned your home for 5 or more years, you may have significant, unrealized gains.

Has your Income or Financial Situation Changed?

If you're making more money, you may be able to afford higher mortgage payments and cover the costs of moving. If your income has decreased, you may want to consider downsizing.

Have you Outgrown your Neighborhood?

The neighborhood you picked for your first home might not be the same one in which you want to settle down for good. You may have realized that you'd like to be closer to your job or live in a better school district.

Are Interest Rates Attractive?

Low rates help you buy "more" home, and also make it easier to find a buyer for your current place.

Are there Reasons why you can't Remodel or Add on?

Sometimes you can create a bigger home by adding a new room or building up. But if your property isn't large enough, your municipality doesn't allow it, or you're simply not interested in remodeling, then moving to a bigger home may be your best option.

Are you Comfortable Moving in the Current Housing Market?

If your market is hot, your home may sell quickly and for top dollar, but the home you buy will also be more expensive. If your market is slow, finding a buyer may take longer, but you'll have more selection and better pricing as you seek your new home. Ask your real estate professional what they see happening locally.

Is the Effort and Cost of Maintaining your Current Home Becoming Difficult to Manage?

A REALTOR® can help you decide whether a smaller house, condo, or rental would be appropriate.
